Sept. 19, 2008 - PRLog -- Atomic Design Inc. Attends Web 2.0 Expo – Clients Reap the Rewards

September 192008, Rochester, N.Y.— Chris Hanna, President & Creative Director of Atomic Design, attends Web 2.0 Expo held at the Javits Center in Manhattan, NY from September 16th-19th. Every year Web 2.0 Expo brings together technical, design, marketing, and business professionals who are building the next generation web. The most successful web industry leaders and firms are present. The Expo supplies considerable amounts of information like business models, development paradigms, and design strategies to enable mainstream businesses.

Atomic Design attends web conferences and search marketing expos, in order to keep current with the latest technologies and trends. Web 2.0 is a great venue to learn, share and network with people in the web industry.

"Search engine marketing, user-generated content, startups, creating successful Web 2.0 applications, and viral marketing are things we deal with every day. Atomic Design will integrate these new ideas and innovations, to better assist our clientele, in developing websites and implementing Internet marketing initiatives. It is in our clients best interest," comments Hanna.

The Expo is co-produced by TechWeb and O'Reilly Media. Notable sponsors for the event included Hp invent, Microsoft, EBay, Intel. For more information and the latest news about the 2008 Web 2.0 Expo visit their webpage http://en.oreilly.com.
