

New Jersey Daycare and Pre-School Security Cameras and Fire Systems Similar To Nursing Homes Systems

Fire Security 101 discusses special considerations when designing effective CCTV camera surveillance monitoring systems and fire sprinkler safety systems for child care facilities and geriatric assisted living facilities.

Oct. 30, 2008 - PRLog -- "The issues faced when designing effective daycare and pre-school facility CCTV camera security surveillance systems are very similar to those that arise in the geriatric nursing homes and assisted living buildings," says a Fire Security 101 spokesperson. She continues to explain that the required New Jersey ratio of facility employees to clients makes it impossible to keep an eye on everyone at all times. The proper design of such systems requires the installer to maximize the number of clients that can be monitored by each individual camera device. "If each camera only monitors one client, your surveillance system will fail to maximize your ability to keep the clients safe and secure," she explains, "proper camera placement also requires a careful inspection of the layout of the premises in order to eliminate blind spots and potential dangers."

Fire systems and sprinkler systems must also be designed specially, since quick and orderly egress of buildings in case of fire is made more difficult when dealing with either very young children or the elderly. These day-care / preschool and nursing home / assisted living fire systems must be installed in a manner that maximizes early detection, which can buy employees invaluable extra seconds or minutes to properly and safely exit the buildings of all clients.
