Aug. 23, 2009 - PRLog -- Statistics reveal that almost all men pick out a traditional diamond engagement ring for their beloved, but if you'd like to know the inside scoop regarding what else is available, then you'll want to read this article. It makes good sense to buy a more distinctive and unusual diamond engagement ring that sparkles and shines brightly. She will just love it, and think you are absolutely brilliant for giving here something a little more unique!

One such alternative choice is the stunning princess cut diamond engagement ring. It's truly exquisite although if your fiance is a real outdoorsy, active type then pay extra special attention to the setting before deciding on which ring is best. Why? The corners of a princess cut diamond are not rounded, resulting in a ring that is easier to chip as it's more fragile. Outdoor river-rapid divas and a fragile engagement ring could be disastrous! The setting should most definitely cover and protect the outside corners of the diamond. Armed with this information means that you can watch your sweetheart paddle knowing her diamond is safe and securely staying put!

If you are looking for a princess cut diamond ring you'll be able to get one online or at a reputable jeweler. Make sure the band and setting are made of the best alloy that is to your lover's liking. There's no point getting her white gold if she only wears rose colored gold; now is there? As the princess cut rings are more nontraditional than many other styles they can also be on the more expensive side of pricey!

What does a princess diamond cut engagement ring look like? The best description is that the top of the diamond is cut in a square shape and the overall shape is like a pyramid. So now get out there and find the perfect princess cut diamond engagement ring for your beloved.
